RESPONSES TO REFEREE 1

First of all, the authors acknowledge referee 1 and the editor for the time spent to review this manuscript and also for their constructive comments. The modifications are indicated by red bold fonts in the revised manuscript.

Line 7: Anomalies from what? Is it some kind of map, or is it a broader regional average. Specifically, if it's a map, does that mean that a region with an anomaly near zero could still be convective, reflecting a climatological situation? Why not just show OLR rather than anomalies?

Interesting comment from the reviewer as its stated in line 7 the anomalies are of OLR and there is a map: fig 10c, so I don't understand the question.

Authors: This figure depicts a time-average map of the OLR anomalies from 16th and 29th January 2020. The daily anomalies are calculated as a relative difference by considering the standard deviation of the monthly background means as the reference values. The background period is defined as the period ranging from January 2010 to December 2018. The daily maps of OLR anomalies are averaged for the period ranging from 16th to 29th January 2020. The use of the OLR anomalies is helpful to evaluate the significance of the convective activity during this period by comparing it to background values.

Line 12: Why is this not shown? You have the space for it – it's a 2x2 figure with nothing in the bottom right corner.

Authors: We think that the OLR anomalies should be sufficient. Furthermore, the average position of the ITCZ was added to Figure 10 in the revised manuscript. The ITCZ has its widest seasonal shift in the Indian Ocean region. Ultimately, what is making the most sense, is where were the convection hotspots and to what extent they are a capable of lifting BB plume in the UTLS

References: There is inconsistency between the citations here. Some have journals in italics, others do not. Also, Clain et al., is missing a journal, Hu et al., Ohneiser et al., and Pizzo et al., seem to be printed in a grey font.

Authors: This point was clarified in the revised manuscript.

Figures: I suggest you remove all the black boxes around multi-panel figures. They are overly distracting (and may not be allowed by the journal in any case.

Authors: We understand the point of view of the referee 1. As the consequence, the black boxes around multi-panel figures were removed in the revised manuscript.
